How St. Corentin Converted King GRADLON.-They say of King Gradlon that he was one of St. Corentin's most brilliant converts to the Christian faith, and tell how by a miracle the pious saint won the worldly king. Corentia lived in the mountain-it is there now -and was fed by miraculous means. He had a spring, and in the spring was a fish; when Corentin was hungry he called the fish to him, cut off enough for his dinner, and threw the fish, instantly made whole again, back into the Gradion was hunting one day, and, becoming hungry, sought the hut of his saint and asked him for food. Corentin called the fish and fed the king, who, not belonging to the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, was filled with admiration and delight; was then and there converted, and gave to Corentin a wide tract of land upon which Quimper is now is now built. At that time Gradlon held his court at Is-a city that is now buried by the

While still the king ruled there the city was smitten by a tidal wave and Gradion fled with his court to Quimper. No more remains of 1s now than traces of paved roads that touch the fields on one hand and the deep on the other; and-yes, there is one thing more remaining a tradition among the sailers that when the sail is angry in its storms, there come forth free the streets of the buried city the cries and gro of the men and women and children who ished there. - Sunday Afternoon.

perstition, says a Plattsburgh paper, against marrying in the month of May. And, like the ill luck ascribed to Friday, and sitting down thirteen to dinner, it often has some singu'ar illustrations. Not long ago, on a bright May day, a Miss H --- of this city was married to a Mr. J -, and their wedding party was one of the happiest and merriest. Both were young, handsome and gifted. Blessed with fortune, friends and health, no two persons ever joined hands for the jurney of life wi h

MARRYING IN MAY .- There is an old su

fairer prospects or brighter hop: s. At the wedding party was one whose perception of the cternal fitness of things being singularly obtuse, recalled this old superstition of ill luck and unhappiness attending those who married in May. All present disclaimed any faith in the old saying, and none made more merry over it than the happy bride and Dear Sir-I have sold Vegetine for a long time groom. Strong in their health and hope and youth, misfortune and death and sorrow were words to them without meaning, yet, icside of six months that noble, handsome, hearty man was shrouded in his coffin, and the lovely, happy bride a broken hearted widow. Many and many a time since then have the frients gathered at that gay wedding and sad, sid funeral, recurred to this singular colocidence in support of the old superstition against marrying in the merry month of May. GEN. PORTER'S VINDICATION .- The old dispute between Generals Pope and Porter over a command of the former given at the scound battle of Bull Run, which the latter is alleged to have disobeyed, appears anew in the form of a trial at West Point, now in progress, where it is presumed the matter will be settled. Col. Charles Marshall, of this city, when approached by a News reporter this morning in reference to it, replied substantially as follows: General Porter, said he, is charged with having disobeyed General Pope's order to attack. Upon this charge he is arranged; but from personal observation, I know that at the time the command was given, 4:30 p. m., it was impossible for it to be performed. In effect, it directed Porter to attack Jackson's rear. But how was this possible when, between the troops of the two, was General Longstreet with twenty thousand infantry, the flower of the Confederate army? I came up with Longstreet myself. and speak advisedly when I say that Porter could not have done as he was ordered without running over Longstreet's corps, and this, said the Colonel, with a tinge of irony, was a phenomenon not ofcen seen. I have been request. ed by General Porter to appear as a witness in his behalf. I shall do so; and what I have given you (addressing the reporter) is, in substance, what I shall say there .- Balto News,

Unwilling Songsters .- Rather more than half a century ago there was in Paisely an eccentric man named Anderson, who was precentor in one of the parish churches. A brother precentor of a church which was attended by a large proportion of the more wealthy of the town people complained loudly to him one day that his congregation did not join in the singing, apparently thinking it more genteel to leave that to the precentor himself and to the hired band. "I'll sune mak' them sing," said Mr. Anderson; 'just you exchange wi' me for a Sabbath, an'

see if I dinna," The exchange took place. Mr. Anderson ap peared in the precentor's deak, the psalm was given out, and the genteel congregation, as usual, did not join in the singing. The precentor stopped in the middle of the first verse, and said, as if only thinking aloud, but in a voice distinctly audible through the whole church. Don't know that tune, I see; try another. And he began again, the second being, like the first, a very common one. The change of the tune had no effect, the congregation did not sing, and again the precentor stopped, saying. "Don't know that tune, either; very strangetry another." A third time the singing of the psalm was begun, a third tune being raised, but this time Mr. Anderson was successful—the congregation sung.
